2004/2005 saw Education For Choice gain significantly in national profile as a recognised and respected resource on young people's right to make informed sexual and reproductive choices.

We launched a major cross-curricula resource on abortion, Rights, Responsibilities and Reason, and revised and redesigned our website, which went live in May 2005 and is possibly the first interaction with Education For Choice for many of our clients, especially young people, for whom reliable, accessible, non-judgemental information on abortion can be hard to find.

There has been critical acclaim and high demand for the cross-curricula resource, which facilitates the teaching of a range of subjects, including Citizenship, Religious Education and Sex and Relationships Education, and uses abortion as a focus for consideration of various issues including political participation and human rights. The publication of the resource was a team effort, but the product itself is a tribute to the insight, creativity and commitment of our Programme Manager, Lisa Hallgarten.

chair's foreword

Our professional training activities went from strength to strength during the year under review, reaching a wider range of professionals working with young people, and receiving positive evaluations from course participants. Our direct work with young people, mostly through our Talk About Choice workshops and presentations delivered by trained facilitators, reached more than 5,000 young people during the 2004-2005 academic year, due mainly to the ambitious goal that Natalie Misaljevich our Education and Training Officer set herself, and then exceeded.

During the year we accepted with regret the resignation of one of our trustees, Ben Crouch, whose assistance on financial and management issues was greatly valued by the board, and welcomed as a new trustee Mat Lindley, whose resource mobilisation expertise is one of several qualities by which he strengthens trustee decision-making capacity. On the staff side, the arrival of Ian Kidd has provided effective and personable office management support.

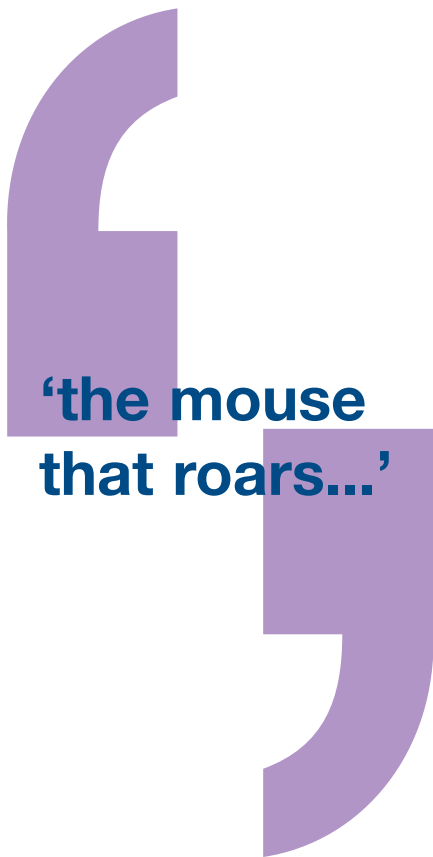

Our reputation rests on our creative and cohesive team of professional staff, which, during 2004-5 enabled Education

For Choice to have a profile on the national sexual and reproductive health and rights scene of which an organisation three times our size would be proud. This was due to two major factors; the enthusiasm and skill of our staff, and the confidence and leadership provided by our Director, Vicky Berry.

Vicky will be leaving Education For Choice later this year; there can be no greater tribute to her achievement as Director than the quality and coherence of the team she has built, and leaves behind, and the body of work of Education For Choice over the last four years that she enabled Education For Choice to accomplish. The trustees are confident that Joanne Wourms, the new Director we have appointed, has the skills and experience to continue the ambitious pattern of growth and development that Vicky established and maintained.

As Chair, I would like to close by thanking our donors for the confidence they have placed in Education For Choice, and assuring them of our renewed commitment to justifying it as we build on our achievements and embark on an ambitious programme of work for 2005-2006.

director's

This was a panel member's description of Education For Choice at a recent conference. It seems a fitting description; we're a small team, but the dedication, professionalism and passion of the staff and volunteers, backed by an engaged and supportive Board of Trustees means that we have an impact far beyond our size.

In 2002, Education For Choice undertook a comprehensive strategic review. In doing so, it identified its unique role in abortion education for young people, re-focused its mission and goals, and created a blueprint for the organisation to follow for the coming three years.

This annual report reviews the final year of that three year strategic plan. Education For Choice's overall aim is to ensure that young people in the UK know about pregnancy choices and abortion, in order to be able to make informed decisions. This is clearly a challenge that will span many strategic plans. One of the most successful outcomes of this plan was to create an effective model of direct work with young people to inform our national dissemination programme through training, resource development and advocacy.

The strategic plan was not an intellectual exercise that then festered on a shelf. Education For Choice - its staff, trustees and volunteers have embedded the parallel tracks of advocacy, programme work and organisational development, so that progress and growth is balanced between these important goals. In this way, learning from direct work has been successfully disseminated to a wider audience, whilst the organisation has also made space for professional development of staff, fundraising, financial planning and monitoring and evaluation.

As we come to review our work for another year, I am immensely proud of our achievements; of the staff and trustees' hard work and of the impact Education For Choice has made. Yet there is still much to do. There remains huge resistance to universal provision of high quality sex and relationships education, and opposition to the balanced and accurate discussion of abortion. Yet we know from young people and the professionals supporting them, that there is a desire and willingness to engage in this work, and to provide high quality information and education for young people. Education For Choice is clear about the contribution it can make; this mouse has a lot more roaring left to do.

EFC STRATEGIC OBJECTIVE:

To focus the education agenda around abortion on the right of young people to accessible and accurate information and resources that facilitate their learning and place a value on informed choice.

One of the questions often asked of Education For Choice is, 'Why talk to young people about abortion?' One of the simplest answers is, 'Because they want to know.' Underpinning all our work is the belief in young people's right to information and education, and the importance of overcoming stigma and taboo to meet that demand. Advocacy, then, for us is about sharing the questions and concerns of young people to make sure that they get the answers and information they want and need.

Media

As Education For Choice's reach across the UK has increased, so we have become a recognised source of reliable, impartial information on abortion education. In the past twelve months both national and regional media have sought Education For Choice's perspectives on a range of issues. These have included Sex and Relationships Education in schools and young people's right to confidential information and services. Media enquiries have increased by 300%, and coverage has included the Guardian, the BBC, the British Medical Journal, ITV News and Sky News.

Education For Choice's new website, launched in Spring 2005 has a media centre, including press releases, comment and responses to abortion issues in the media, including the representation of teenage pregnancy and abortion on television. In this way, we can provide a reasoned voice in the often sensationalised discussion of abortion, and provide young people with the opportunity to deconstruct the abortion debate and come to their own conclusions.

Professionals

In October 2004, Education For Choice held its first ever public event - a seminar that launched Rights, Responsibilities and Reason, our new cross-curricula resource for secondary schools (read about this resource on page 15).

The seminar brought together health and education professionals and journalists to explore issues relating to young people and abortion. An expert panel gave their perspectives on the importance of abortion education and the challenges of delivering the work. An audience of

'At last, a resource which helps us to talk to young people about abortion in a measured and sensible way.'

Gill Frances, National Children's Bureau

practitioners, policy-makers and service providers contributed their experiences in a discussion that included young people's access to confidential services, the role of Sex and Relationships Education, and parents' involvement.

In Winter 2004, Education For Choice co-hosted a series of conferences in Newcastle, Birmingham and London to help disseminate the findings of research undertaken by the University of Southampton and Joseph Rowntree Foundation into influences on the decision making of young women with unintended pregnancies.

'Few young women reported that they had actually thought in great detail about pregnancy, abortion or motherhood prior to conceiving.'

A matter of choice? Explaining national variations in teenage abortion and motherhood
Joseph Rowntree Foundation, June 2004

For Education For Choice, this was one of the most resonant findings of the research, mirroring our own experience of working with young people. For young people to make sense of the information they are given about contraception, they also need to have had an opportunity to consider what it might be like to experience unintended pregnancy. Greater realisation of the reality of pregnancy and the choices and decisions that pregnancy entails is more likely to help young people make healthy, informed decisions and avoid unwanted pregnancy.

All three dissemination conferences were well-evaluated, with many participants commissioning Education For Choice training in order to increase the capacity of professionals in their area to address abortion with young people.

Future Plans and Challenges

In the course of training and conference participation, Education For Choice has identified two key areas of unmet need: those of boys and young men, and parents.

Understandably, most discussion of pregnancy decision-making focuses on young women's needs. However, young men's needs are often overlooked. There are opportunities to engage young men, both to improve communication with their pregnant girlfriends, and to give young men the opportunity to express their thoughts and feelings. In the coming year, Education For Choice will be identifying examples of good practice of work with boys and young men, and seeking opportunities to disseminate this work, both through information sharing and training. The overall aim is to improve the support available for young men, which will ultimately help them to make safe and informed decisions in the future about their sexual health.

There has been considerable coverage of the role parents have to play should their teenage children face unintended pregnancy. Education For Choice will be working in the next twelve months to identify ways of supporting parents both to help their children avoid unintended pregnancy and to offer support should pregnancy occur.

EFC STRATEGIC OBJECTIVE:

To ensure that Sex and Relationships Education, in a range of settings, enables young people to explore attitudes and values about pregnancy and abortion and provides them with the knowledge and skills to make and act on informed choices.

Education For Choice's programme objectives are about developing good practice in abortion education, and then modelling it through training and resources. This enables us to reach a wider audience than we could do solely through direct work with young people. Our programme experience links with our advocacy work, in order to promote and disseminate our learning further.

Working with young people

Talk About Choice is the foundation on which Education For Choice builds. Trained facilitators - many of whom are volunteers - deliver workshops and presentations for young people to help them consider for themselves the decisions that lead to, and result from, unintended pregnancy. In accordance with our own Best Practice Guidance on Abortion Education, no one pregnancy option is either promoted or stigmatised: all are valued equally. However, we focus particularly on abortion in our work because it carries the greatest taboo and is therefore the least discussed. Our work opens up the subject for safe, constructive and informed discussion that encourages and explores a range of viewpoints and provides young people with accurate information.

Delivered in the Greater London area, the experience is shared nationally through our training and resources.

'EFC provides an excellent service, non-condescending, non personal, very professional and informative.

Amazing participation from the students.'

The Brit School, Croydon

Over the course of the 2004-05 academic year, 5,354 young people participated in Talk About Choice sessions. This surpassed our target of 5,000 for the year, and represented a 28% increase on the previous year.

Hard to reach young people

In addition to our work in mainstream education, Education For Choice delivers Talk About Choice to more marginalised young people, in a range of settings. Young people who are disengaged from education are often at greater risk of unintended pregnancy and as such benefit from intensive work on issues around pregnancy choices and abortion, to better help them prevent unintended pregnancy in the first place.

In the 2004-5 academic year, seven intensive workshops were delivered, in settings that included Pupil Referral Units (specialist units attended by young people at risk of exclusion) and young mums' groups

Future Plans and Challenges

Our work with marginalised young people has increased in the past year, and we plan to continue this in the coming academic year. This experience will be of particular benefit to our Boys and Young Men project. The majority of participants from non-mainstream settings are boys and young men, and we intend to continue our practice of action learning, whereby direct experience is disseminated through our training and advocacy work.

A challenge that we face each year is meeting the demand for Talk About Choice workshops. We work closely with schools across London and whilst the majority of our bookings are repeat requests from schools, as Education For Choice's visibility increases, so demand for our services intensifies. We are committed to meeting this demand, and will be monitoring the programme and seeking additional ways to augment our capacity.

Professional Training

In 2004-5, Education For Choice set an ambitious target of delivering 48 days' multi-agency training. This target was set in order to increase dramatically our reach across the UK, and to build upon the groundswell of interest in abortion education. We met this challenge, and delivered training in places as far apart as Hartlepool, Truro, Liverpool and Norfolk.

‘Excellent - we should provide this across the wider workforce...

Informative, enjoyable and useful for future practice.’

Training Participant, Lancashire February 2005

Over 670 professionals, including school nurses, teachers, youth workers and outreach workers participated in the training, with overwhelmingly positive evaluations of the training. In particular, participants told us they valued the practical nature of the training and the opportunity to consider their own views and attitudes towards pregnancy and abortion.

Regional Development

With support from local and regional Teenage Pregnancy Strategies, Education For Choice has worked over the past three years in the North East of England. This work has included modelling our Talk About Choice programme in schools, delivering training and presenting at conferences, with the aim of embedding abortion education in local practice.

In Spring 2005, this focused work was completed with the delivery of two multi-agency training days for workers across the North East. The benefits of this more intensive, focused work is that it enables colleagues from across a region to learn from each other and establish contacts that are sustainable far beyond Education For Choice’s input, and to establish sufficient regional investment in abortion education to ensure that the work continues indefinitely.

Future Plans and Challenges

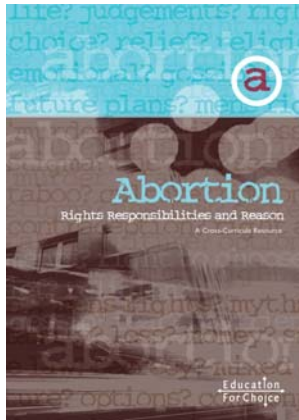

As an organisation with a small staff, achieving a balance of outputs is always challenging. In the coming year, Education For Choice has identified exciting opportunities to address the unmet needs of boys and young men and parents. In order to meet this need, professional training output will be slightly reduced in the short term, with the long-term aim of increasing organisational capacity to meet the demand for training and to continue to identify additional areas of work for development.

‘The facilitators and the programme were excellent. Delivery and use of suitable exercises allowed participants to explore their own views and values.’

Sexual Health Service Provider, Newcastle, April 2005

Resources

Education For Choice's comprehensive new teaching resource, Rights, Responsibilities and Reason was published in October 2004. With step by step lesson plans, tools and factsheets, the resource uses the issue of abortion to explore a range of issues in Citizenship, Religious Education and Sex and Relationships Education. Since its launch, demand has been remarkable, with over 600 copies going to schools, youth groups and other settings that support young people's learning.

Education For Choice's website was completely re-written in the past year. Developed with the ongoing input of a group of stakeholders, including young people, the new site offers resources, information and tools for young people, professionals, parents and the media. The new design is eye-catching and fresh, providing EFC with a positive and engaging online presence. In its first six weeks, the site attracted over 2,500 visitors.

A new addition to Education For Choice's resource for young people was Who needs to know? - a postcard containing the basic facts about abortion and signposting young people to sources of support and information. The postcard has been widely disseminated through summer health buses, Talk About Choice workshops and in response to requests for information from young people contacting Education For Choice.

Future Plans

In the next year, Education For Choice will be looking at its existing resources for young people and updating and rewriting them where necessary. In particular, our factsheet for young people will be re-developed to ensure it answers the questions we are often asked in workshops, and to make certain it complements other, more recent resources that we have developed.

The new website will be a key tool for providing resources and tools on abortion education. The site will be regularly updated, providing a one-stop shop for people needing abortion education materials and information.

organisational development

EFC STRATEGIC OBJECTIVE:

To build a well-respected and sustainable organisation with the financial and human capacity to determine and plan for its future in a way which is transparent, responsive and subject to critical reflection.

In Spring 2005, staff and trustees reviewed Education For Choice's three-year strategic plan and revised it to incorporate new areas of work, such as meeting the needs of boys and young men and parents, as well as addressing issues of service delivery, as they relate to young people. Education For Choice's 2005-8 strategic plan builds on the previous three years' work - indeed the previous thirteen years' work - to provide challenging targets for the future.

In securing its future, Education For Choice has increased its income generation capacity, through resource sales, professional training and consultancy. These are sustainable income streams, and are largely made possible by the increased profile of Education For Choice and its reputation for quality work.

2005 saw the recruitment of two new members of the Education For Choice team. Mat Lindley joined the Education For Choice Trustee board. Mat brings with him enthusiasm for Education For Choice's work as well as solid fundraising experience. In addition, a new Administrator, Ian Kidd, joined the staff, and one of his duties will be to act as liaison between schools and facilitators, helping to ensure that Talk About Choice continues to deliver high quality work with young people.

Future Plans and Challenges

As is the case for most small voluntary organisations, funding will always present a challenge. Having sought external expertise in diversifying its funding base, Education For Choice will be implementing these plans and hoping to reach a wider audience of funders to support our work.

financial statements

Objects, Organisation and Activities

Education for Choice is constituted under a trust deed dated 19th March 1992 and is registered with the Charity Commission, number 1010629.

The objects of the charity are to advance public education concerning contraception, pregnancy, abortion and childbirth and to protect and preserve public health by the provision of advice and counselling concerning contraception, pregnancy, abortion and childbirth.

Trustees' Responsibilities

Education for Choice is governed by a Board of Trustees, which meets on average seven times a year. The Trustees are required to prepare financial statements for each financial year which give a true and fair view of the state of affairs of the charity and of the income and expenditure of the charity for that period.

In preparation of these financial statements, the Trustees have:

- selected suitable accounting policies and applied them consistently;
- made reasonable and prudent judgements and estimates;
- stated whether applicable accounting standards and statements of Recommended Practice have been followed subject to any material departures disclosed and explained in the financial statements;

- prepared the financial statements on a going concern basis unless it is inappropriate to presume that the charity will continue in operation.

The Trustees are responsible for keeping proper accounting records, which disclose with reasonable accuracy at any time, the financial position of the charity. The Trustees are also responsible for safeguarding the assets of the charity and hence for taking reasonable steps for the prevention and detection of fraud and other irregularities.

Reserves Policy

The level of unrestricted funds at 31st March 2005 is £32,935 is equal to three months' expenditure. The Trustees have considered the reserves required to operate the charity and have concluded that it would be prudent to maintain unrestricted funds at a level sufficient to fund six months' normal expenditure on staff salaries and basic services. This shortfall is being addressed by the Trustees with proposals to secure additional funding for core expenditure.

Risk Assessment

The Trustees have assessed the risks to which the charity is exposed and have put in place measures and controls to mitigate the effects of such risks on the finances and general operation of the organisation.

Approved by the Trustees and signed on their behalf:

Report of the Independent Examiner

Report to the Trustees on the accounts for the year ended 31st March 2005 set out on pages 17 to 22.

As the charity's Trustees you are responsible for the preparation of the accounts; you consider that the audit requirement of section 43(2) of the Charities Act 1993 (the Act) does not apply. It is my responsibility to state, on the basis of procedures specified in the General Directions given by the Charity Commissioners under section 43(7)(b) of the Act, whether particular matters have come to my attention.

My examination was carried out in accordance with the general directions given by the Charity Commissioners. An examination includes a review of the accounting records kept by the charity and a comparison of the accounts presented with those records. It also includes consideration of any unusual items or disclosures in the accounts, and seeking explanations from the management committee concerning any such matters. The procedures undertaken do not provide all the evidence that would be required in an audit, and consequently I do not express an audit opinion on the view given by the accounts.

In connection with my examination, no matter has come to my attention

- (1) which gives me reasonable cause to believe that in any material respect the requirements
 - to keep accounting records in accordance with section 41 of the Act; and
 - to prepare accounts which accord with the accounting records and to comply with the accounting requirements of the Act

have not been met; or

- (1) to which in my opinion, attention should be drawn in order to enable a proper understanding of the accounts to be reached.
